Or any adult who cares about protecting children.

As adult members of society, we are solely responsible for the safety of children. It's important to teach children how to recognize and avoid risky situations, but it's unrealistic to think that a child can fend off sexual advances by an adult. Fortunately, we can protect them by educating ourselves on how to recognize the signs of sexual abuse, react to our suspicions and respond to a child in need. Sexual abuse thrives on our discomfort in even naming it—and this culture of silence gives power to the perpetrators.
